

Sources of State Road Funding

How does lowa Compare?

Introduction:

States use a wide variety of methods to raise money for their roads and highways. In many states, including Iowa, vehicle (automobile and truck) registration fees and fuel taxes are the major sources of funds; however, some states rely heavily on other taxes, bonds, and tolls.

Funding Roads:

On average, states raise 38% of their road funds from fuel taxes and 22% from vehicle registration fees. Bonds make up 18% and the remaining 22% comes from other taxes and tolls.

Dependence on fuel taxes range from a low of 5% in Georgia to a high of 69% in Arkansas. Dependence on vehicle registration fees range from a low of 3% in Georgia to a high of 55% in Kentucky. Thirty-seven percent of Iowa's road funds come from fuel taxes (30th highest among states), 34% from vehicle registration fees (10th highest), and 29% from the general fund and imposts.

Vehicle Registration Fees:

1) Automobile Registration Fees:

State automobile registration fee assessment varies from a flat fee to a fee assessed by automobile weight, age, value, horsepower, and number of cylinders. Twenty-seven of the states use a flat fee for automobile registration, eight use automobile weight, and the remaining use a combination of factors. Iowa sets registration fees based on weight and value.

Fuel tax per capita rates range from a low of $64 in Washington D.C. to a high of $295 in Montana. Iowa's rate is $198 (19th highest). These rates were calculated by dividing the 2004 gross fuel tax collections in each state by the population aged 18 and over.
